Yamaguchi Center for Arts and Media [YCAM] · Venue: Studio A

The first full-fledged theatre production realized at YCAM
A new experience that defies the conventional idea of “theatre”
Masataka Matsuda (playwright/director, Marebito-no-Kai) and photographer Keiko Sasaoka (photographers’ gallery) unveil their new theatre piece “PARK CITY” at the Yamaguchi Center for Arts and Media. This YCAM original production is a result of Matsuda’s stay in Yamaguchi as part of the “Work-in-residence” program exploring the possibilities of artistic expression together with the Center’s expert staff -YCAM InterLab-. “PARK CITY” experiments with temporal, spatial and physical sensation by combining stage art with photography and media technology.

“PARK CITY” Hiroshima portrayed in words and photographs
Remote seats equipped with individual video screens

Masataka Matsuda, a leading Japanese playwright/director since the 1990s, has received numerous awards for his experimental work exploring the possibilities of stage arts with the theatre company Marebito-no-Kai. In his newest creation, he captures scenes of the city with the help of Keiko Sasaoka, a young photographer regarded for her original approach. The two artists illustrate through texts and photographs the latent memories of the city of Hiroshima as it was re-erected around a “monument” in the form of a park after the war.

Seats in the theatre are deliberately placed at a distance from the stage, and equipped with individual video screens. This alternative viewing style enables the audience to enjoy a new form of theatre with text, photography, sound and imagery transcending the boundaries of time and space. Look forward to a radically new type of stage production that incorporates Masataka Matsuda’s script and direction, Sasaoka’s photographs, and YCAM’s own cutting-edge media technology.

Marebito-no-Kai  “PARK CITY”

Welcome to a new type of experimental theatre that explores the creative possibilities of media technology in performing arts, creating a space and time shared by actors and audience to highlight the boundaries between fiction and nonfiction, memory and oblivion, live and recorded action, body and media.

Visualizing the hidden voices and memories of a city on the example of Hiroshima and the monument that forms the redeveloped town’s centerpiece

This piece’s title "PARK CITY" is at once the title of a collection of photos of the Hiroshima Peace Memorial Park that Sasaoka has continuously taken since leaving the town where she was born and raised. 31-year-old Sasaoka approaches "Hiroshima" with a different mindset than those artists who have been focusing on the city’s history as a bombsite. Based on her photographs as a point of departure, this piece illustrates the latent memories of the city of Hiroshima as it was re-erected around a "monument" in the form of a park after the war.

Masataka Matsuda, who is responsible for the script, established an original method of “unearthing” through research and writing the voices that have been buried in history, and “reporting” through the bodies of actors. After defining a certain terminus ad quem with the Marebito-no-Kai’s pieces "Auto-da-fe" (2006) and "cryptograph" (2007), for his latest production "Voiceprints City - Letter to FATHER" (2009) Matsuda conducted research in his hometown Nagasaki, and interviewed his own father, in order to further explore his original method with additional documentary style elements.

This time he picked up the voices of the city and the people of Hiroshima, and constructed a script that "bears testimony" to these memories in an overwhelming flood of abstract, fragmentary texts, rather than a story with actors that each play a character. With her photographs’ easy messages and unique feeling of distance that defies empathy, Sasaoka expands her audience’s senses of language and vision.

A playwright and a photographer exchange ideas to build an originally multilayered plot of words and images

For this new piece themed around "Hiroshima", Masataka Matsuda and Keiko Sasaoka applied a completely new production method by exchanging texts and photographs with each other. Sasaoka took photographs based on Matsuda’s texts, which in return inspired the playwright’s direction. The script and story line that emerged out of this collaboration build up an intricately tangled timeline while accentuating the notion of “acting (live) in the present” in performing arts, and the function of photography as a medium for recording/reproduction. Spectators will be able to sense the memory of the city - the central theme of this play - and an open view of the urban space from a multilayered time axis beyond the boundaries of past and present.

Remote seats and individual video screens

Appreciation dominated by the peculiar distance between actors and audience, body and voice, stage and imagery

Only the theatre’s third floor seats are available for viewing this piece, as it was conceived to be experienced in a unique style looking down upon the stage. Different from plays that attempt to pull the scenery on stage from the extraordinary into the realm of everyday life, here the audience is made perfectly aware of the distance from the stage.

In addition, all seats are equipped with individual video screens, which suddenly shower the viewer with prerecorded footage and real-time images recorded by cameras directed toward the stage. This setup involving numerous monitors and speakers is designed to juxtapose the physical distance between the stage and the audience, the indirect sense of distance brought about by media technology, and the distance between the past and the present as represented by photography and stage art respectively. By intervening in the performing arts audiences’ viewing habits with media technology, the piece introduces an entirely new kind of theatre experience.

About the "Work-in-residence" program

What is “work-in-residence” at the Yamaguchi Center for Arts and Media all about?

In this program organized and produced by the Yamaguchi Center for Arts and Media (YCAM), artists create works of fine or performing art during a stay at YCAM for a period between three weeks and one month. About 40 original "works-in-residence" have been made and presented at YCAM so far. Along with the combination of performance/exhibition spaces and a production team of specialized technicians (YCAM InterLab), such programs introducing existing outstanding works, as well as promoting new works made at YCAM in Japan and abroad, can be considered as one prominent characteristic of YCAM’s activities. The countless works of art that were created this way have been highly evaluated around the world.
Marebito-no-Kai

Founded in 2003 under the mission of exploring possibility of theater and realized the first piece “Shima Shiki Shindokan (Island Style Vibrating Organ)” written by Masataka Matsuda in May, 2004. Their most important works are "cryptograph" (2007, performed in Egypt, Kyoto, China, and India), "Voiceprints City - Letter for FATHER" (2009, performed in Itami and Tokyo), and more. The company searches the reality of today by laying the world of unordinary.

Masataka Matsuda

Born 1962 in Nagasaki Prefecture. Matsuda is a leading Japanese playwright/director since the 1990s. He started his career in drama while a student at Ritsumeikan University. He formed Jiku Gekijo company in Kyoto in 1990, and wrote and directed all the works for the company until it was disbanded in 1997. He worked as a freelance after that and wrote for and co-produced with Seinendan and Bungakuza.

He founded Marebito-no-Kai in May, 2003 and started to direct again as well as continuing to write for the company. He is outstanding for his ability to apply everyday setting and unflinching language to depict the unconscion fetters hidden in the human unconscious.

He has received numerous awards, including OMS Drama Award 1994 for "Saka no Uenoie (The house on the hill)”, OMS Drama Award and KISHIDA Kunio Drama Award in 1996 for “Umi to Higasa (Sea and Parasol)”, Yomiuri Drama Award for “Tsuki no Misaki (Moon Cape)”, Yomiuri Literature Award in 1998 for “Natsu no Sunanoue (On the sand of the Summer)” and Kyoto Cultural Encouragement Prize in 2000. He is a guest professor at Kyoto University of Art and Design.

Keiko Sasaoka

Born 1978 in Hiroshima Prefecture. Graduated from Tokyo Zokei University in 2002. Founding member of photographers’ gallery, a group of photographers that runs a gallery, organizes exhibitions and photography courses, publishes in-house magazines and photo collections, and engages in various other activities that involve the medium of photography. Was the editor in charge of volumes 2 to 7 of the “photographers’ gallery press” journal. Was awarded an encouragement prize at “The Vision of Contemporary Art 2008,” The Ueno Royal Museum, Tokyo. Has been exhibiting her creations in solo and group shows in Japan and abroad since 2001, when she presented her first work in public. Has been focusing on the “interior” and “exterior” of the historical city of Hiroshima since leaving the town where she grew up. This experience is reflected in many of her works, which keep fascinating viewers through the unique mixture of power and coolness they represent. Is reputed among fans and critics as a promising artist from the next generation of photographers.
